6 Leadership Lessons You Can Learn Over Lunch

Patrick Leddin, Ph.D., PMP on LinkedIn

1. Turn Something Common into Something Cool

I ate a lot of peanut butter and jam (PB&J) sandwiches as a kid. I understand that memories depart from reality over time, but I swear I ate them daily for 8 or 9 years. Whether this memory is accurate or not, the point is clear - a PB&J sandwich was commonplace and certainly not cool. Food trucks in the USA have given the PB&J sandwich a new lease on life. A truck labelled "The Monsterlicious" PB&J Sandwich is far from ordinary - it's an experience. Consider these questions about your team or organization:

- Is there anything about your product or service that has become commonplace? If so, what can you do to breath new life into it?
- Do your own employees even see your offerings as cool? If not, how can they talk personally about them?
- Would people stand in line to buy what you offer or your team provides?
